THE SALVAGE EUROPE STORY

For over two decades Salvage Europe has travelled the world, searching for architectural antiques, gems to bring into a modern context. Old-growth timber was carefully selected by the woodsmen of the past... a slower pace of life meant timber was milled by hand, left to season akin to a great whiskey, and air-dried for many years before being used to build. The wood we now discover has had the opportunity to stabilise for over a century before we bring it back into being.

Like the woodsmen of past, Salvage Europe has a team of experts who carefully select each piece of wood for its beauty and quality. They salvage the antique woods from the industrial forests – old barns, homes and industrial buildings scheduled for demolition. The wood is then cleaned, de-nailed, milled, and dressed; transforming these ancient treasures into beautiful contemporary building materials. The history of each piece of wood is visible through its patina - the hallmarks of age that give the wood depth and tell the story of its provenance.
